

Important Medi-Cal Information if You Use Nursing-Facility Care or Get Home Care

Medi-Cal has special rules about your income if you use nursing-facility care. This includes getting care at a nursing facility, or in your own home.

► Read this if You Are Single and Use Nursing Facility Care.

Each month, most of your income will go to your nursing facility or toward your nursing care. You can keep $35 each month for personal needs.

► Read this if:

- You Use Nursing-Facility Care and Your Spouse or Registered Domestic Partner Lives at Home.
- You Are Applying for a Home and Community-Based Waiver Program and Your Spouse or Registered Domestic Partner Lives at Home.

There are special rules that may let you transfer some or all of your income to your spouse or registered domestic partner. These are called “Spousal Impoverishment Rules.”

These rules help make sure that the person at home has enough money to live on. They can also help you and your spouse or registered domestic partner qualify for free Medi-Cal.

- To qualify in 2025, your spouse or registered domestic partner’s income usually needs to be less than $3,948 per month.
- You may still qualify if your spouse or registered domestic partner makes more than $3,948 per month. This happens if your spouse or registered domestic partner needs more of your income to pay for food or healthcare, keep your home, or care for an immediate family member who is disabled.

IMPORTANT NEW LAW AS OF 2024

The Medi-Cal program no longer counts your assets when determining if you are eligible for benefits. This means that you do not need to report your bank accounts, vehicles, or property.

The Medi-Cal program is not allowed to ask you about your assets.

You still need to report all of your income to your county worker. This includes income from jobs, child and spousal support, Social Security retirement and disability benefits, rental income, and more.
